Sharon Dolliver, right, and her daughter Shyanne run up some steps near Cole Harbour Place Wednesday. Sharon has recently lost 165 pounds and will be running the full marathon in Sunday's Blue Nose Marathon along with Shyanne.

Marathon finish line marks another milestone for mom

MATTHEW WUEST

Thousands of happy, healthy walkers and runners will cross the finish line at the Blue Nose International Marathon Sunday.

Sharon Dolliver will fit right in. As unlikely as it seemed more than three years ago — before the Dartmouth mother of eight changed her life by losing 165 pounds through diet and exercise — Dolliver has signed up to walk/run the 42.2-kilometre full marathon.

"A couple of years ago, even in my wildest dreams, to be able to run a marathon? Never," she says. "Never, never."

Never say never. The turnaround started for Dolliver when the calendar flipped to 2006.

The 46-year-old was balancing a job with the demands of parenting eight children — four foster and four biological — but realized she was neglecting her health. It took her 19 months to go from 305 to 140 pounds. She has now been at her goal weight for 22 months. "Finally, one day, I said, you know what? If I can (work and be a parent) and that's difficult, then I need to take care of me, even though that's difficult," she recalls.

Dolliver quotes a statistic that says 90 per cent of people who lose weight gain it back. She took up walking last year with 17-year-old daughter Shyanne to maintain her weight loss.

Sharon says she gained inspiration from Shyanne, a figure skater with a gold medal at the Special Olympics. Mother and daughter will participate in the Blue Nose together, although five-foot-seven Shyanne might leave Sharon behind.

"We want each other to go for it," Shyanne says.

Crossing the finish line won't mark the end for Sharon, but another milestone that makes her story a success.

"When you're standing at the bottom of that mountain looking up, you feel there's no way you'll be able to get to the top," she says.

"Yet here we stand. We feel like we're at the top of the mountain and we feel like we're conquering it."

Man injured

GUNS A young man was still in rough shape Thursday after being shot in North Preston late Wednesday night, the second shooting in that area in less than a week.

"He's still listed in critical condition," said Halifax RCMP spokesman Cpl. Joe Taplin.

Reports say the man was shot in the forehead, but Taplin wouldn't confirm the victim's injuries.

He said officers responded to a 9-1-1 call of "multiple shots being fired" on Clarence Street at 10:45 p.m.

"When we arrived there was a 19-year-old male who had been shot," Taplin said, adding the victim was treated by paramedics and rushed to QEII Health Sciences Centre.

Taplin said police weren't releasing the victim's name and hadn't pinpointed any persons of interest.

The shooting took place in a residential area, he said, which is "very concerning to us."

Officers arrested a 22-year-old man Thursday afternoon in relation to the other recent shooting in the community. Shortly before 2 a.m. Sunday, a 35-year-old man suffered non-life threatening injuries when he was shot at a home in East Preston. The suspect is facing charges of aggravated assault, assault causing bodily harm and several firearm offences.

Violent crime rising: HRP

Chief stresses recent violence did not target 'law-abiding citizens'

KRISTEN LIPSCOMBE
for Metro Halifax

Violent crime is on the rise, the heads of Halifax Regional Police and Halifax RCMP said Thursday, after a long week of two homicides, an alleged attempted murder, a couple of serious shootings and the abduction of two teens.

"The last few weeks have been very challenging from a policing perspective," HRP Chief Frank Beazley told reporters gathered at the Gittingen Street police station.

"There has been a slight increase in violent crime, when comparing this year's first quarter stats to last year's."

Violent crime, including homicides and assaults, is up four per cent, police say, but added crime overall is down three per cent.

"What we are seeing is an increase in the degree of violence and a cluster of crimes in a short period of time," Beazley said.

He said "there is no known connection" among the six homicides in HRM this year, or the slew of violent crimes this week, adding in many cases he's seen over his career "the victim and assailant are known to each other."

RCMP Supt. Darrell Beaton, left, and Halifax Regional Police Chief Frank Beazley speak to the media Thursday about the recent spate of violent crime in the area.

Supt. Darrell Beaton of Halifax RCMP added "these violent crimes are between individuals who are involved in the criminal element."

"Law-abiding citizens are not targets," he said, but emphasized the fact they're happening in public places is of "grave concern."

Beaton said both police forces are adding resources this weekend, while Beaz-ley said "if something was to happen again tomorrow, we would have a fresh team."

But he admitted police have to prioritize, which means minor thefts and frauds "may get put on the shelf ... but the major incidents will be taken care of."

Beazley said he met with Mayor Peter Kelly Thursday to assure him that police still have enough resources to maintain public safety.

At a glance

2009's first-quarter stats

- Crime in the HRM is down three per cent overall.
- Violent crime has gone up by four per cent.
- Property crime is down one per cent, and break-and-enters and robberies have decreased.
- Theft, homicides and attempted homicides have risen.

Ink safely, tattoo fest founder urges artists

GEOFF DAVIES
for Metro Halifax

The Maritime Tattoo Festival is coming to the Halifax Forum this weekend, bringing fire-eaters, mud wrestlers and 73 tattoo artists from around the world.

Even though the sideshow performer will let you staple money to his chest, in the eyes of the festival's founder, the main event is the promotion of health and safety in an industry that's unregulated in the Maritimes.

"Because there's no health inspection, you're getting a lot of tattoo shops that aren't biologically tested, and uncertified tattoo artists working," said Amber Thorpe, who started this festival in 2007 and owns the local parlour Adept Tattoos.

Thorpe said the education of tattoo artists is really what drives her to run the festival.

Anyone doling out body art at the event will have passed an eight-hour course on safe tattooing techniques. They will also be able to take other seminars during the festival that runs Saturday through Monday.

"(The festival has) just gotten bigger. We're actually, by artist standards, rated one of the No. 1 shows in Canada," Thorpe said. "It's just so much fun and there's so much education going on."

The festival is also an opportunity for people to appreciate an art form that Thorpe said is only slowly gaining recognition. "We don't really get art galleries much, you know?" she said. "This is how we kind of create our own art gallery."

Extra buses favoured in poll

TRANSPORTATION More buses for Metro Transit should be the top priority for improving public transportation in the HRM, according to a poll released Thursday by Corporate Research Associates.

With the choices of a fast ferry to and from Bedford, more Metro Transit buses or a light rail service from Fall River to Halifax, 55 per cent of the 400 people surveyed said additional buses were the most important priority to invest money in. Twenty-two per cent chose the rail service and 12 per cent went with the fast ferry.

The results are part of the CRA's Halifax Urban Report, an independent survey of HRM residents. The survey was held between April 30 and May 12, and is accurate with 4.9 percentage points, 95 times out of 100.

HIAA running $447K deficit: CEO

AVIATION The Halifax International Airport Authority is operating under its first-ever deficit after releasing its 2008 operating and financial results yesterday.

The airport authority said it is running a deficit of $447,000 with total operating expenses in 2008 at $54.8 million. It generated $41.2 million in operating revenues and collected $13.2 million in airport improvement fees.

"In the midst of soaring gas and oil prices of 2008 and a turbulent global economy, Halifax International Airport Authority continued to manage and develop Halifax Stanfield International Airport in a prudent and forward-looking manner," HIAA president and CEO Tom Ruth said in a release.

Overall passenger traffic increased by 3.2 per cent in 2008 to a record-setting 3,578,931 passengers, the release said, but passenger numbers fell in the last half of the year.

Murder suspect appears in court

PHILIP CROUCHER

A 59-year-old man made a brief appearance yesterday in Dartmouth provincial court on a charge of second-degree murder, after another man was discovered dead at a Portland Street rooming house earlier this week.

Acting on information from an East Division beat member, Halifax Regional Police say they checked the residence at 214 Portland St. in Dartmouth in regards to a possible injured person at about 9 p.m. Tuesday.

Instead, they arrived to find the body of a man, who has since been identified as 33-year-old Gordon Alexander Murray of Dartmouth.

Police later arrested the suspect on scene and took him into custody. They charged him with second-degree murder overnight Wednesday.

At the scene late Tuesday night, several area residents told Metro Halifax the home where police say the murder took place is known in the neighbourhood as a crack house.

Sheriffs accompanied Lloyd Alexander Wilmot, 59, of Dartmouth into the courtroom yesterday. Wilmot never spoke during the short session, and the matter was held over until June 25 for possible election and plea.

Wilmot is being remanded at the Nova Scotia Correctional Facility in Burnside.

Lloyd Alexander Wilmot is escorted from Dartmouth provincial court Thursday.

Tories OK funds despite threat

PAUL MCLEOD
paul.mcleod@metronews.ca

The Tories have approved $130 million in stimulus spending this week, contradicting what they threatened wouldn't happen if they were to go to the polls.

Premier Rodney MacDonald had repeatedly said opposition parties forcing an election would cost Nova Scotians jobs. MacDonald said his government was out of money, and if the budget didn't pass, they couldn't approve new projects.

But Tuesday the Tories approved $130 million in new projects through a special warrant. That allows cabinet to spend money without it being approved by the legislature.

Finance Minister Jamie Muir confirmed Thursday the government was planning on using the special warrant last week, at the same time MacDonald was claiming jobs would be lost. "We knew it was likely we were going to have to come up with some additional dollars through a special warrant, yes," he told reporters.

Governments have a cap on how much they can spend until a new budget is passed. The Tories ran out of money April 30. The budget was introduced May 4 and couldn't have been put to a vote until next week.

Muir said the job crisis referenced by MacDonald still exists. Only, that crisis will now occur if the Tories aren't elected.

"We presented a budget which would have enabled us to address those projects," Muir said. "If you listen to what the other two parties have said, they are not prepared to commit the money to enable those projects to go ahead."

Both NDP Leader Darrell Dexter and Liberal Leader

Stephen McNeil accused the Tories Thursday of dishonesty and playing politics with the jobs of Nova Scotians.

The new projects weren't revealed, but Muir said they included new ambulances and school buses, expanding broadband technology and paving roads.

Muir said the $130 million in funding will last until July.

Casey disputes NDP price for hospital-bed expansion

PAUL MCLEOD
paul.mcleod@metronews.ca

Health Minister Karen Casey says the math of an NDP promise to open more hospital beds doesn't add up.

On Tuesday the NDP released a platform of 50 promises totalling $79 million. One of those was a $4.85 million promise to open up 17 new beds at the Halifax Infirmary.

But Thursday Casey sent out a news release refuting those numbers. She said the Tories recently created 14 new beds at a much higher cost, once three new nurses, three paramedics and three aides were included.

"The real cost here is $21 million for a 14-bed expansion, not less than $5 million for 17 beds as the NDP are saying," said Casey.

"Their number is unrealistic and misleading."

The Liberals were in Stewiacke Thursday targeting the agriculture industry. In a speech McNeil said he wants to make the industry more viable and sustainable.

"We have three priorities. One is an educational component in the classroom. One is about making sure that the federal dollars that are on the table would be committed towards allowing people to transition to more sustainable agricultural models," McNeil said.

"And the other one was around carbon capture credits and biofuels that would allow farmers to generate extra revenue that would come from just food sources."

McNeil said his government would negotiate with agriculture, Agrifood Canada and ACOA to develop a transition fund for farmers.

School the right path for busy single mom

She knows it's corny to say, but for recent Dalhousie graduate Nicole Adams the motto "everything happens for a reason" rings true.

"I'm also a believer that you take certain paths in lives and when you're on the wrong path, there are all these indicators," the 34-year-old Halifax woman said Thursday of why she's finally pursuing her dream of becoming either a medical doctor or an oncology researcher.

"When you're on the right path, everything works," she said during a break at the Killam Library. "I've had huge opportunities since I've been here."

That includes her success in Dal's transition year program, which includes one year of university courses, without credit, and helps First Nations and African Canadian adults make the move to regular post-secondary study.

Adams, of mixed race, is valedictorian for the 2009 class, picking up eight of 10 awards at a small graduation ceremony April 24. Not only is her name in

But Adams has already been chipping away at first-year courses while enrolled in the transition year, with the goal of getting into Dalhousie Medical School. That's not her only tough task, as she's al-

Contemporary loon dance part of new 2010 performance season

GEOFF DAVIES
for Metro Halifax

Halifax's leading contemporary dance organization unveiled its lineup for the 2009-10 season yesterday.

Paul Caskey, artistic director of Live Art Dance Productions, announced the company will be presenting eight live shows in Halifax between October 2009 and May 2010.

The performances, brought to town by dancers from across the country, include contemporary jazz, traditional Japanese drumming, and a dance show adapted from a children's book.

"I find that diversity really exciting, that we're able to keep audiences coming in and (keep them) curious about contemporary dance," Caskey said.

The season launch event, which took place yesterday at Sir James Dunn Theatre, included a performance by Lisa Phinney, whose as of yet named show will kick off Live Art's season Oct. 1 to 3.

Phinney, who studied environmental science at Dalhousie, was inspired to create her dance show by a moment she experienced while doing field research on loon behaviour.

"It was a really misty, beautiful, early morning and I could hear the loons calling, and when the mist on the lake kind of lifted a bit I saw that there were nine loons on the lake and they were calling to each other," recalled Phinney after her performance.

"It just moved me to create a dance that could elicit the same kind of reaction I had in that moment but in a dance theatre setting."

Other performers coming to town include Les Ballets Jazz de Montreal on Nov. 18 and Denise Fujiwara on April 29 to May 1, both of whom have achieved international acclaim and reputation.

From student to online sex trader

Woman sells pictures to pay debts

Overwhelming student loans and escalating medical bills have sent a 21-year-old Calgary student to the underground Internet sex trade to make ends meet.

But she is not alone. With simple S-E-X key-strokes, men can access hundreds of women selling various sexual indulgences through Craigslist's "erotic services" category, but Eve insists she doesn't sell intercourse.

"I provide pictures and videos at their request in exchange for money. What I'm doing is no different than being in a Playboy, just with fewer viewers," she insists.

But perhaps more alarming is why she is doing.

Eve said she was diagnosed with cancer last year and began taking unapproved medication, propelling her to a $50,000 debt.

"In reality, I need more than that to break even. That's my reason for doing this," she said, adding she also works full time for $13 an hour and attends school full time.

Craigslist has been under scrutiny for its erotic ads, and the highly publicized "Craigslist killer" case, in which a man is accused of murdering a New York masseuse and attacking two other escorts who posted ads on the site.

Rocco Rossi is calling the attack ads "manna from heaven" and says they've sparked a rush in donations to the Liberal party from supporters outraged at the Conservative tactics.

It seems the Conservatives, whom Ignatieff has already credited with helping unite the Liberals and speed their leadership pick thanks to the parliamentary showdown last fall, are now helping fill the coffers too. "They have this innate ability at every turn to help the Liberal party. This is one of the best favours yet," Rossi said.

China memoirs evoke turbulent memories

The memoirs of China's late Communist Party chief who was removed in 1989 for sympathizing with student protesters will give the Party plenty to think about when deciding the country's political future, his one-time top aide said.

Two decades after his downfall and four years after his death, reformist leader Zhao Ziyang has shattered the official silence cloaking the 1989 Tiananmen crackdown in memoirs he recorded in secret under house arrest.

In his revelations, Zhao praised Western-style democracy and said multi-party politics, a free press and an independent judiciary were needed for China to become a parliamentary democracy.

Zhao had been accused of splitting the Party for challenging then-paramount leader Deng Xiaoping's decision to send in troops to crush the pro-democracy protests centred on Tiananmen Square in Beijing.

Zhao died in 2005 after more than 15 years under house arrest.

China has changed dramatically since 1989, breaking out of diplomatic isolation, emerging to become the world's third-biggest economy, hosting the Olympics and making its first space walk last year. Most Chinese are richer and freer.

Zhao

But Tiananmen is still taboo in China and the authorities are expected to ban Zhao's memoirs.

The memoirs come during a sensitive year, when the Party must navigate through potentially volatile anniversaries, including June 4 and the 60th anniversary of the founding of modern China, while coping with a slowing economy and rising joblessness. REUTERS

Guiding girls on weight

Arya M. Sharma, MD
Guest Columnist

Anyone interested in promoting the health of young girls is faced with a seemingly impossible challenge. On one hand, in recent years we have seen a dramatic increase in the incidence of eating disorders — now one of the most common and dangerous chronic condition in young women. On the other hand, the obesity epidemic has also adversely affected girls and women, with unprecedented numbers developing excess weight and related health issues, ranging from polycystic ovary syndrome and infertility to type-2 diabetes and sleep apnea.

While those concerned about eating disorders are careful to not reinforce a negative focus on body weight, those concerned about obesity are unsure how to broach this issue without further diminishing self-esteem. There is clearly concern about the unintended harmful consequences from overweight and obesity prevention initiatives, particularly those delivered in schools. But over-emphasis on weight or group weigh-ins can trigger fat prejudice, weight-based teasing, or the ostracizing of larger children, or, cause children to react to healthy eating messages by adopting extreme approaches to dieting and consequently losing weight to a degree that negatively impacts their health.

Perhaps the common ground lies in recognizing both eating disorders and obesity as psychosocial health issues. At one end of the spectrum girls and young women seek to control their weight by resorting to extreme dieting, excessive exercise and other destructive behaviours. At the other end, girls and young women turn to food to cope with negative emotions, stress, boredom, abandonment, emotional neglect and isolation.

Now, the Girl Guides of Canada have taken up the challenge of dealing with negative body image by introducing the Love Yourself Challenge badge, which girls aged five to 17 can earn by completing tasks that promote self-esteem, healthy eating and a positive body image.

Whether this initiative will indeed help to reduce the risk of eating disorders while promoting healthy weight remains to be seen. Increased self-esteem is clearly beneficial whether you are dealing with under or overweight.

The societal causes of eating disorders and obesity may well be the same: media, advertising, disintegration of nuclear families, lack of role models, loss of control over an excessively demanding, stressful and fast-paced society that takes little time to play, eat or reflect on the things that truly matter in life.

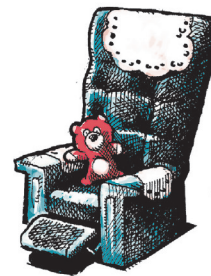

Let us hope that the Girl Guides' approach can manage to help girls walk the fine line between pathological dieting and numbing their emotions with food. If it can help dissociate self-esteem from body weight, much will have been won.

Worth Mentioning

A worker packs away recovered money after a German man lost thousands of euros to a gust of wind.

Talk about blowing your money

GERMANY A man lost 23,000 euros ($31,180) to the wind when an envelope with the money he had stuck in the passenger seat pocket of his convertible blew away during a test drive in northern Germany.

The cash — in 500, 200, and 100 euro notes — fluttered across the motorway in the midst of speeding traffic near the city of Hanover, police said.

The man, 23, contacted police immediately, who then blocked the motorway in both directions for nearly half an hour. Eight police officers assisted the man in retrieving his notes and were able to recover 20,000 euros.

"The remaining 3,000 euros have not been found," a police spokeswoman said, but warned treasure hunters of searching for any bills and keeping them, saying that was illegal.

From sexy politicians to donairs, we win

UrbanCompass

Paul McLeod

metronews.ca/mcleod

In keeping with this week's Metro SunnySide theme of what's great about Halifax, here's your Urban Compass list of five things where our city shines.

Syllables

At a staggering 12 syllables long, the name Halifax Regional Municipality towers above its boring, concise rivals.

This linguistic juggernaut makes cities like "Hull" and "Guelph" hang their heads in shame.

Sexy politicians

This is, of course, very much relative.

There are usually lower standards in ranking the hotness of politicians as opposed to normal people.

It's like converting imperial to metric.

Maybe it's all those meals they can expense.

But Nova Scotians somehow manage to elect federal politicians that some may actually find desirable.

The recent annual poll by the Hill Times named Peter MacKay the sexiest male MP, with Scott Brison also in the mix (yes, they aren't technically from HRM, but they spend plenty of time here).

And new Halifax MP Megan Leslie was also deemed quite comely, ranking as the third sexiest female MP (Minister of Labour Rona Ambrose came first).

Also, I hear that HRM Mayor Peter Kelly is quite

SunnySide

the sex symbol in certain circles.

Donairs

Known as the nectar of the gods, even official Halifax tourism signs promote "4 a.m. donairs!"

We may not have a Canadian Football League team, a subway system or even an opera house, but we do have an endless supply of sweet, sweet tasting donairs.

Call it a wash.

City view planes

Downtown Halifax is blessed with a beautiful view of the Halifax Harbour from the top of Citadel Hill.

These view planes are sacred. Luckily, anyone who tries to erect something to block them can be smote with a biblical-level swarm of red tape.

Dartmouth

Many who haven't been there pre-judge Dartmouth as some lawless wasteland filled with organ thieves and methadone clinics.

But those who live there know it's actually the area's best kept secret.

Either way, Dartmouth really helps build up the municipality's street cred. Sure, downtown Halifax is the cool, popular kid in the class.

But Dartmouth is the dark, mysterious one surrounded by an air of intrigue.

Also it's got like a billion lakes, so when Canada wins all those canoe and kayak Olympic medals next time, you can thank Dartmouth for it.

$1B for credit insurers

Insurance demand exceeding capacity: EDC

Canada's government offered up to $1 billion in extraordinary funding to the country's six private credit insurers Thursday to help boost business activity and combat a steep recession.

The government said demand for credit insurance in Canada surpasses capacity as companies that sell goods seek protection against risks such as customers refusing to pay or going bankrupt.

The state-run Export Development Canada (EDC), endowed with new powers to combat the credit crisis,

"Private insurers are not able to offer the full amount of coverage. What we're doing is matching their offering."

Pierre Gignac, EDC

said it will step in to fill that gap.

"What we've seen in our discussion with private insurers is that many times clients come to them and look for protection on certain buyers ... and the private insurers are not able to offer the full amount of coverage," said Pierre Gignac, senior vice-president of insurance at EDC.

"What we're doing is matching their offering." Lead players in Canada's credit insurance sector are Coface, a unit of French bank Natixis SA, and Euler Hermes, a unit of Germany's Allianz SE.

The other smaller players are AIG Insurance, Atradius, Execurisk and the Guarantee Co. of North America.

Group cuts forecast for drop in '09 resale home prices

HOUSING Canadian resale home prices will likely fall 5.2 per cent this year, less than earlier forecast, and April sales activity trended higher, the Canadian Real Estate Association said Thursday.

The association said its new forecast for a 5.2 per cent drop in 2009 to $287,700 for the average home price compares with the fall of eight per cent it forecast earlier in the year. In 2008 the average selling price was $303,594.

CREA also revised its forecast for 2009 sales to 370,500 units, a drop of 14.7 per cent from 2008. That's an increase from its earlier forecast of 360,900 sales this year due to better-than-expected first-quarter sales in British Columbia and Ontario.

Running through hard times

Field of Play

Scott
Russell

metronews.ca/fieldofplay

The guy in the store where running shoes are sold had a simple message.

"People run even when they're stressed," he said. Then he punched the cash register and rang up $169 for a new pair of Mizunos while gleefully handing over a box full of hope.

Business is good. "Maybe people run because they're stressed," replied the customer.

Running events are myriad in this country and even in a period of recession, they seem to be flourishing. A Vancouver 10K boasted 55,000 entrants in April. Earlier this month, 12,000 took part in Sporting Life's annual dash down one of the busiest streets in Toronto. From the Bridge City Boogie in Saskatoon to the Blue Nose International Marathon in Halifax, people are running in record numbers.

"Corporate support is down," said the organizer of the Mississauga Marathon, featuring 12,000 participants in its weekend events. "But there are more runners than ever before ...

"In tough times, it's not big business that makes the difference, but the individual."

Bill Rodgers, a four-time winner of the Boston Marathon, was at the start line of the Mississauga Marathon to address competitors before the race. Rodgers had recently returned to the road following surgery for prostate cancer last year. Last month, at age 61, he completed his first Boston Marathon in a decade.

"It was tough, but I made it," he told the runners in Mississauga. "Now you, too, are in the race and everything is on your side, including the weather."

And so the pack got on course as it wound its way to the shores of Lake Ontario. Along the route, runners were aided by 1,200 volunteers who handed out water and energy drinks.

In the end, the Mississauga Marathon raised hundreds of thousands of dollars for a health-care facility, a cancer research unit and the local YMCA.

What is it that drives the running boom across the country in this difficult economic period and that makes it a force in the success of charitable work in Canada?

Perhaps it's the knowledge that getting past these hard times is possible if we all hunker down and stay in the race.

Gemini Award winner and author Scott Russell is the Host of CBC Sports Weekend seen Saturday afternoons.

Huskies land star guard Colley

MATTHEW WUEST
matthew.wuest@metronews.ca

BASKETBALL The Saint Mary's Huskies are hoping Justine Colley will help turn their women's basketball program around.

The Huskies, who have lost more games than any team in Atlantic University Sport since 2006, announced yesterday that Colley, an East Preston native and Halifax Grammar Gryphons guard, has decided to attend Saint Mary's.

"With a player of her calibre, she's going to have an immediate impact," said Huskies head coach Scott Munro, who coached Colley on the provincial team last year.

"She's the type of player we want to attract to Saint Mary's. We're going to be much more competitive (next year) and Justine's going to be a huge part of putting us there."

The Huskies have lost 49 of their past 60 games and went 2-18 last season in Munro's first as head coach.

Colley, a two-time MVP of the metro high school circuit, was a key player at last year's FIBA Americas women's under-18 basketball tournament as Canada clinched a berth at this year's FIBA under-19 world championship.

The sought-after recruit had several NCAA Division I options but opted to stay north of the border. She'll join fifth-year all-star Kelsey Daley in the Huskies backcourt.

"It should be a pretty formidable combo," said Munro. "One of the strengths of good teams is strength in the backcourt, and I certainly think we have that with those two."

Despite being hosts, the Oceanic have to be considered an underdog after not even making the QMJHL final. They bowed out in four straight to the Drummondville Voltigeurs in the semifinals and haven't played since April 22.

Also watch for former Halifax Mooseheads forward Logan MacMillan and head coach Clement Jodoin, who held the same job with the Mooseheads in the 1990s.

DRUMMONDVILLE VOLTIGEURS

Teams will have to find a way to shut down the prolific Voltigeurs, a favourite after averaging nearly six goals per game en route to their first QMJHL title.

Weekend schedule

Following is the weekend schedule for the Memorial Cup, a nine-day tournament that concludes May 24. All games will be broadcast on Sportsnet. All times Eastern.

Friday

• Kelowna vs. Rimouski, 7 p.m.

Saturday

• Drummondville vs. Windsor, 4:30 p.m.

Sunday

• Rimouski vs. Windsor, 4:30 p.m.

Monday

• Drummondville vs. Kelowna, 7 p.m.

Playoff MVP Yannick Riendeau (29 goals among 52 points) makes them tick, while draft-eligible blue-liner Dmitry Kulikov is one of the CHL's best.

The loss of Maple Leafs draftee Chris DiDomenico to a broken leg takes some bite out of the offence.

KELOWNA ROCKETS

The Rockets are a familiar face here, having made four trips to the Memorial Cup in the past seven years. They upset the No. 1-ranked Calgary Hitmen in the WHL final but can be fairly classed as an underdog along with the Oceanic.

Hulking defenceman Tyler Myers, a Sabres first-rounder, and Swedish forward Mikael Backlund, a Flames first-rounder, are players to watch, while Canadian world junior forward Jamie Benn led the WHL playoffs with 33 points.

WINDSOR SPITFIRES

When Calgary was knocked off in the WHL final, it left Windsor as the top-ranked team at the Memorial Cup.

The tough, skilled Spitfires rolled over some formidable OHL competition to get here and are led by playoff MVP and 2010 draft prospect Taylor Hall, Russian forward Andre Loktionov and ultra-skilled defenceman Ryan Ellis.

The Spitfires are loaded with talent and widely considered the pre-tournament favourite along with the Voltigeurs.

Marchand gets payback

AHL Brad Marchand has gotten the last laugh on the Worcester Sharks in the American Hockey League playoffs.

The Providence Bruins rookie scored the game's opening goal and added an assist on Wednesday night as his club eliminated the Sharks from the playoffs with a 5-1 win.

Marchand, a Hammonds Plains native and former Halifax Mooseheads forward, had been accused of showboating in the previous game and was called "classless" and "a joke" by members of the Sharks in a Worcester newspaper.

He leads all AHL rookies in playoff scoring and is tied for seventh overall with 11 points in 11 games.

Marchand and the Bruins advance to the AHL semifinals against the Hershey Bears, who feature Bedford's Andrew Joudrey and Porters Lake's Andrew Gordon. Andrew Bodnar-chuk of Hammonds Plains also plays for the Bruins.

Soul sucked out of Angels

Harvard Professor Robert Langdon (Tom Hanks) is back in action. Three years after he uncovered the complicated personal life of Jesus Christ in The Da Vinci Code he's once again using his knowledge of symbology to unravel the mystery of a secret brotherhood called the Illuminati and prevent a terrorist act against the Vatican.

What's more, he'll do it all in just one night. Sounds thrilling, yes? Unfortunately it isn't.

Most of the elements from Dan Brown's best-selling book Angels and Demons are in place, although several characters have been omitted and story lines reconfigured and condensed in the name of brevity.

Summarizing the story, however, brings a simplicity that sucks out most of the mystery and colourful details contained in the novel. Langdon seems to be able to unravel clues, some hundreds of years old, with such ease that Angels and Demons becomes simply an elaborate game of connect-the-dots rather than a fully fleshed out story.

It's a big summer movie, so we shouldn't really expect sophisticated North by Northwest style intrigue, but since the suspense lacks the action should take up the slack. Unfortunately though, while A&D wants to be an ecclesiastical National Treasure, it contains few of the thrills of those popular Nic Cage movies.

Director Ron Howard

fills the screen with handsome images of Rome but every time the movie works up the steam, Robert (Mr. Exposition) Langdon steps in with a long winded explanation of the history behind the various clues and symbols that sucks much of the movie's momentum.

Angels and Demons isn't as talky as Da Vinci Code, but its fatal flaw is the Langdon character.

In the books he is the historical tour guide who provides the facts to bind the story together. On film, however, he comes across as a windbag who simply supports the story instead of adding to it.

That being said, Angels and Demons is a vast improvement over The Da Vinci Code. The pace has been ramped up and the running time chopped but even though these Dan Brown adaptations are Hanks and Howard's most successful movies, they aren't their best.

If they choose to work together again I hope it's in Splash 2 or Apollo 13: Off to Mars! and not another tepid Langdon adventure.

Bale's Salvation

Actor eases up for Terminator sequel

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News

Christian Bale doesn't like being told what to do. In fact, he admits he's been more keen to take a role in a film if others tell him not to.

"Some people were saying to me, 'Why do you want to do that?' Which made me go, 'I'm going to go do it, then,'" Bale explains. "I really want to do it more, the more people say that. Maybe I should cut it out."

The latest film people told him to stay away from is Terminator Salvation, the fourth in the man vs. the machines franchise. Bale steps into the role of John Connor, humanity's only hope against evil killer robots. At first, Bale wasn't interested in taking on another big Hollywood franchise.

"This is not Brecht or something. This is Terminator. What are people really going there for? They're going for a good time."

Christian Bale

"Initially when I heard of this I thought, 'Well, it's done. There's no new story to be told,'" he says. "That was why I said no a few times."

But in the end, Bale agreed, even though the final script hadn't been written. "I just couldn't believe that it couldn't become something that was worthy of people putting down 10 bucks in a movie theatre," he says.

Movie Feature

Though he has a reputation as a sometimes too serious, brooding actor — prone to flare-ups like the tirade infamously leaked online last year from the Terminator Salvation set — Bale actually takes a much more relaxed view of his work.

"This is not Brecht or something."

challenges were limited. "I've gone through Batman, and that was tougher," he explains. "You don't get humans hand-wrestling terminators. You've kind of lost by the time you get to that situation."

But there were some aspects of the productions he could've done without — and not just absentminded crew members.

"When they don't position the harnesses correctly, it can really hurt ... down there," he deadpans. "You break out in cold sweats."

Controversy formula for box-office hit

InFocus

Richard Crouse

metronews.ca/infocus

Catholic League boss William Donohue doesn't want you to see the sequel to The Da Vinci Code. In a booklet titled Angels & Demons: More Demonic than Angelic, he accuses director Ron Howard of "smearing the Catholic Church."

History shows us that movies have courted controversy since the very beginning.

The 1896 film The Kiss rode reviews like, "The spectacle of the prolonged pasturing on each other's lips was beastly enough in life size on the stage but magnified to gargantuan proportions ... it is absolutely disgusting," to the top of the box office.

Half a century later, another Howard, this time Howard Hughes, directed a movie thought to be so salacious that its "assault on decency" saw several theatre owners arrested for unspooling it.

Completed in 1941, The Outlaw was such a hot potato it didn't see general release until 1946.

Officially the film is about Doc Holliday and Billy the Kid's feud over a woman called Rio, but informally it's about something else entirely — star Jane Russell's chest. The emphasis on her breasts was too much for the Hollywood Production Code Administration, who demanded changes to the film.

Hughes balked, becoming the first American filmmaker to defy the Production Code and use the resulting hullabaloo to lure audiences into the theatres.

Richard Crouse's Movie Show can be seen every Sunday at 6:30 p.m. on the El Channel. mrcrouse33@hotmail.com.

Rocker Bif Naked makes a Promise

Worked on new disc while fighting cancer

ROB MCMAHON
for Metro Canada

Bif Naked thrives on regimen: The Vancouver-based rocker is up at dawn to exercise and maintains a straight-edge lifestyle.

But after her diagnosis for breast cancer in January 2008 and subsequent treatment, that all changed.

"I'm a raw food vegan — I've been doing that a long time — but one month all I wanted was yam rolls, and they're definitely not raw," Naked said, laughing. "To this day, I can barely look at beets. I used to devour beet juice, and ate grated beets on salad every day, but now I can't stand the smell."

Despite these challenges, Naked (real name Beth Torbert) powered through writing and recording a new album. Titled The Promise, the disc is the culmination of months spent with producer, guitarist and "taskmaster" Jason Darr.

Reached a day before the album's release, Naked was recovering from ovarian surgery. But despite a long run of media interviews, the singer was gregarious and upbeat, joking if she hadn't been in the hospital, she would have hit the gym.

Speaking about chemotherapy, she said the physiological setbacks impacted the recording process, as did ever-changing scheduling.

"Every chemo (treatment) is different — you can't find any consistency," she said. "At one point I was in the hospital for 20 days straight. My larynx gland was so swollen I couldn't swallow ... I was incapacitated for almost a month. Sometimes it seemed like the album

"I think the number one thing as a friend and family member, is to go with that person to chemo, keep them company." Bif Naked would never come to light, but it did, thanks in part to (Jason) Darr, my taskmaster."

The resulting disc features Naked's raw singing, layered over guitar-heavy pop punk. Images of hair falling out (on Amazon Motel) and a song titled Sick may cause fans to automatically reach to recent events for interpretation.

But Naked said the songs are just as rooted in the emotion that powers her creativity: Love. Along with the support of her husband, family, friends and fans, she found love while healing alongside other patients, who became good friends.

"A lot of people will always assume if it's is a sad song, it must be about chemo: 'Oh, here's another sad song, it must be about chemo.' No!" she said. "(Cancer) can be very isolating ... There are a million and one books on cancer, but I think the number one thing as a friend and family member, is to go with that person to chemo, keep them company if they want it, and check up with them every day."

With billions of songs available, looking for new music (or music that's new to you) can be frustrating and intimidating. Here are a few ways to make things easier.

The Hype Machine (hypem.com): This site scours blog postings and streaming websites for whatever you ask it to. Convenient "buy now" buttons make downloading what you've found a snap.

A New Band a Day (bandaday.com): Just like it sounds: a blog that promises a write up on a new band every day. No options to purchase.

New Band of the Day (<http://tinyurl.com/6ay36d>):

A service of Britain's Guardian newspaper. At last count, there are nearly 550 bands in the archives, too. No option to purchase.

Crazed Hits (crazed-hits.com): A free talent scout tip sheet featuring hot unsigned bands and artists. This is great if you want to see what the current A&R bidding war might be.

looking for new music and then ranked them in a chart? We Are Hunted is a good attempt at monitoring the most popular songs on MySpace Music, BitTorrent, Last.fm, iLike, blogs, Twitter and press releases. Using some clever clustering algorithms, they come up with the Top 99 songs of the day.

ExploreMusic (explore-music.com): OK, OK, so this is a shameless plug for a site that I curate, but me and the staff sort through hundreds of songs every week so you can get a head start on finding something interesting. And yeah, we can help you buy something you like.

Your local record store: I know so many people who haven't set foot in a proper record store in years. Why not try the old fashioned method of trolling through the racks? It still works — and there's something about the thrill of the hunt, too.

Your favourite radio station: There's a myth that you can't hear anything new on the radio anymore. That's false. You just need to step out of your comfort zone. Try listening to a station you normally wouldn't. You'll be surprised at what you may discover. It may not be new, but it'll be new to you.

Paul Rodgers, Queen split up

BANDS Queen will no longer rock you — at least not with Paul Rodgers.

Ahead of a summer reunion tour with his primary band Bad Company, the singer said the Queen + Paul Rodgers collaboration is, in effect, over, and without animosity.

"At this point we're gonna sit back from this," Rodgers told Billboard.com.

"My arrangement with (Queen's) Brian May and Roger Taylor) was similar to my arrangement with Jimmy (Page) in The Firm in that it was never meant to be a permanent arrangement."

Former Charlie's Angel Farrah Fawcett documents her heart-wrenching struggle with anal cancer in TV film Farrah's Story.

Fawcett's video diary

Angels actress shaves her head in a film about cancer battle

Actress Farrah Fawcett is shown shaving off her famous blond hair in a heart-wrenching personal video diary of her long battle with cancer that is reaching its end.

Farrah's Story — effectively the self-written obituary of the Charlie's Angels star — was given a semi-private premiere on Wednesday night ahead of a nationwide broadcast on NBC television on Friday.

The 90-minute film, much of it narrated by Fawcett herself, chronicles the highs and the lows of the actress' numerous medical treatments since her 2006 diagnosis with anal cancer and the recent weeks when she has been bedridden, heavily medicated and barely able to recognize her son.

Her long-time companion, actor Ryan O'Neal, called Fawcett a fighter and said the 62-year-old actress wanted to share her cancer journey with the public — on her own terms.

Fawcett found international fame in the 1970s for her role as the tanned, blond private eye in the hit television show Charlie's Angels. The film includes footage of a delighted young Prince Charles of Britain getting to meet her.

Unflinching in its detail, the film shows Fawcett sometimes vomiting from the side effects of her cancer treatments and on other occasions dancing with friends during times when her tumors had shrunk.

"I do not want to die of this disease. I want to stay alive," she said when the cancer spread to her liver in 2007.

"So I say to God ... it is seriously time for a miracle." About six months ago her hair began to fall out.

Doctors had initially avoided treatment that would have led to hair loss for Fawcett, whose flowing blond locks were copied by millions of women around the world in the 1970s.

But when other treatments in the United States and Germany had run out, Fawcett films her hair falling out on a comb and then shaves off the remainder, saving only her bangs.

Oprah apologizes to author Frey

PEOPLE Oprah Winfrey has apologized to author James Frey for shaming him on her TV chat show amid revelations he had fabricated parts of his memoir, her spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Winfrey's apology was first reported on the website of Vanity Fair, with the author saying he felt "grateful" for Winfrey's gesture. The two have a tumultuous history.

Winfrey had been one of Frey's most vocal boosters, naming his 2003 drugs-and-alcohol memoir A Million Little Pieces one of her "book club" choices in 2005 and propelling it to bestseller status.

Star Trek explores fashion frontier

DANIEL HOLLOWAY
Metro World News

How do you dress Mr. Spock in a post-Wolverine world?

The problem no doubt bedevilled director J.J. Abrams and costume designer Michael Kaplan as they set out to make their new Star Trek film. But it looks like they got it right.

Following its opening last week, Trek has proved itself a critical darling and commercial juggernaut — a sci-fi movie that feels contemporary despite constant visual references to its 1966 TV-series roots.

"It didn't look like too much had changed, but it still felt sleek and modern," Dino-Ray Ramos, a fashion writer for sfxam.com, says of the film's costuming.

Wise indeed. Original Trek is steeped in a colour palette straight out of the psychedelic 1960s. A reboot featuring leather trenches and black Ray-Bans instead of mustard pullovers and micro-miniskirts would have been sacrilege.

Dorothy Baca teaches design for performance at the University of New Mexico and was the costume supervisor on the 1997 film Batman and Robin. She says the original Trek and the equally candy-coloured 1966-68 Batman TV series made loud fashion statements for a loud cultural moment.

"They were indicative of what was going on in the youth culture at that time," Baca says. "If you look at the '60s in terms of clothing and fashion, it's the first time we see a huge boom of things marketed toward young people."

But bright colours and mid-century enthusiasm have given way to dark characters wearing dark clothes. So why did kitsch and colour disappear from science fiction films?

"The average teen male is probably more jaded, a little bit more worldly than in mid-century."

Star Trek's costuming felt "sleek and modern."

• Batman (TV series, 1966-68)

It's hard to decide which is worse: The eyebrows drawn on Adam West's bat-cowl, or the short pants that Burt Ward traumatized a generation of TV watchers in as Robin.

• Battlestar Galactica (TV series, 1978)

Half the people on this show were dressed like Han Solo. That's a good thing. The bad thing is that the other half were either dressed in Hol-loween costume-grade robot suits or like space-cult leaders.

• The Fantastic Four (1994)

Eleven years before the horrible 2005 movie, there was an even more horrible film about the classic Marvel superheroes made on a shoestring budget to satisfy a legal obligation. The costumes, effects and makeup are among the worst ever committed to film — but still they're somehow more believable than Jessica Alba playing a brilliant scientist.

• The Black Hole (1979)

Nicknamed 20,000 Leagues Under Space, because, well, it was a lot like 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea, the prime example of slow-moving '70s sci-fi films is also the prime example for horrible robot costumes.

Worst (or best) sci-fi/action-adventure costuming ever:

Scorsese to direct Sinatra biopic film

FILM Oscar-winning director Martin Scorsese will direct the big screen movie about the colorful life of entertainment legend Frank Sinatra, who legions of fans called Ol' Blue Eyes. Universal Pictures said Wednesday.

Casting has yet to be announced for the role of Sinatra, arguably the most popular singer of his era and who also struck box office gold with roles such as his Oscar-winning turn in From Here to Eternity in 1953.

The singer was previously portrayed on the small screen by Philip Casnoff in a 1992 television miniseries and by Ray Liotta in HBO's 1998 movie, The Rat Pack.

But the Scorsese movie, Sinatra, is thought to be the first to depict the life of the star in a feature film.

The project, on which Sinatra's daughter Tina will serve as executive producer, was announced one day before the anniversary of the death of the iconic singer and film star, who died in 1998 of a heart attack at the age of 82.

a grand career

Negotiations with Sinatra's estate took several years as the family reportedly debated how best to tell the story.

Sinatra made his first recording in 1939 and continued recording almost until his death, being responsible for such classics as Strangers in the Night and My Way.

Oscar-nominated screenwriter Phil Alden Robinson, who wrote Field of Dreams, is writing the screenplay. REUTERS

1 Angels & Demons

FILM You don't need to be a code breaker to see that the latest adaptation of a Dan Brown novel has all the signs of a box-office whopper. Tom Hanks returns as symbologist Robert Langdon, Ron Howard's back at the helm, and good old Catholicism looms large in this crack thriller. Need we say more?

2 Jon & Kate

CELEBRITY Forget Brangelina. In our gossip-hungry world, this couple from the TLC reality series Jon & Kate Plus 8 is prime fodder now. Paparazzi and rag mags are fast piling up the illicit-affair allegations as the Gosselins battle to save their relationship. In fact, when the show's fifth season premieres May 25, a full-hour will be devoted to the strains on the couple's marriage, usmagazine.com reports.

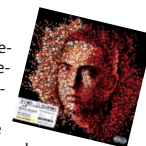

6 Calendar Girls

PEOPLE Ten years after their much-publicized strip, the ladies from north England are once again baring it all for cancer research. The women — whose first calendar inspired the movie Calendar Girls, starring Helen Mirren and Julie Walters — have come out with a new 2010 calendar. It was unveiled this week and is available online.

3 Eminem

ALBUM After a long battle with prescription pills, Marshall Mathers returns next Tuesday with his first album in nearly five years. The video for We Made You, which carries on the Eminem tradition of skewering popular figures, has already become a YouTube hit. With the market saturated with acid-tongued, hip-hop poseurs, it's about time the real Slim Shady stood up and took back his crown.

In brief

MOVIES DreamWorks picked up a remake of the 1985 vampire horror comedy Fright Night. The original film, written and directed by Tom Holland, centered on a teen who discovers that his neighbours are vampires. No writer has been hired yet, but the aim is to keep the comic horror tone while modernizing the effects. Michael Gaeta and Alison Rosenzweig are producing with Michael De Luca. REUTERS

Reaper could be revived?

Thought Reaper was dead?

Think again. Like some of the undead creatures on the show, the quirky CW comedy-drama is refusing to die.

Sources said show producer ABC Studios is in talks with CW affiliate stations about continuing Reaper as a syndicated series for Sunday night.

Reaper essentially has been cancelled at the CW, but most stations are said to love the fan-favourite series starring Brett Harrison as the devil's bounty hunter.

So when the network decided to give Sunday night back to its affiliates last week, they started preliminary conversations with ABC Studios about possibly continuing the show with new episodes.

Sources said ABC is also exploring a possible afterlife for the series on cable.

Both scenarios are considered a longshot, with one major obstacle: Reaper creators/executive producers Michele Fazekas and Tara Butters have moved on, recently signing a deal with 20th TV. REUTERS

Spielberg: From director to video-game impresario?

Oscar-winning film director Steven Spielberg was so frustrated that no video games catered for all of his seven children that he did what an entertainment maestro might do — made his own game.

Boom Blox was the first in a multi-franchise deal between Spielberg and video game publisher Electronic Arts and has sold close to one million copies globally since it was released for Nintendo's Wii last May.

On May 19, EA releases Spielberg's second game, Boom Blox Bash Party.

Spielberg, who said he plays just about every game that comes out, is a big fan of Nintendo's Wii console and its motion-sensor controls that involved physical interactivity.

"It's been very, very good for a parent like me who wants our kids not to be couch potatoes, but to get up and move their bodies around more," said

Spielberg, who worked closely with the team at EA's Los Angeles studio on both the games.

Spielberg said Boom Blox originated from the idea of using the Wii controller to knock something down, like the traditional family toy of building blocks.

In the newest game up to four players face a range of challenges of up to 400 levels in locations as diverse as outer space and deep under the sea where they can create their own user-generated content and share this with others online.

"You can become a creator at home," said Spielberg. "You can become a participant and you can become an activist. It's a really wonderful way to empower players to share their ideas with the world and give us better ideas for our own future of the next iteration beyond Bash Party."

Going Out

Long weekend: I'll drink to that (song)

HARRY HODGE

harry.hodge@metronews.ca

HOLIDAY Victoria Day weekend is a uniquely Canadian kind of holiday. Summer is just around the corner and we've emerged from our winter slumber. It's also not deadly hot yet, but there is a good possibility some of you will read this before hopping in the car and sitting on the deck at a cottage someplace.

The weekend also is recognized for the pivotal role of a cold brewski. Odds are more than one of you will down a couple of frosty brown pops this weekend, and could be you will also be near some kind of speaker, blasting some kind of tunes. Metro has outlined for you three songs for some particularly Canadian spots as you celebrate this upcoming long weekend.

If you want to get the party started and have booze as part of your theme, Cigarettes and Alcohol by Oasis is a fitting starter. Liam Gallagher's wails about "looking for some action/but all I found was cigarettes and alcohol" can be played at any time really.

The next song on your list should be One Bourbon, One Scotch, One Beer by John Lee Hooker. This could either be on your stereo as you're entertaining at the cottage, but is just as likely to be found on the jukebox at the lakeside pub. This celebrates not just beer, but other options for you to savour into the wee hours.

Sunday morning. Music will wake me up. Sunday Morning Coming Down by Johnny Cash. Breakfast: Greasy eggs and sausage? Hair of the dog? You'll all have your own playlists, but one would assume a couple of these are already in there. Have a cold one and enjoy Victoria Day!

Jay's high-security hospital stay

CRAZY FAN? Jay Leno's recent hospital stay turned into a high-security operation when a fake priest tried to gain access to the comedian's private room, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The comedian was forced to cancel a recent late-night show after medical bosses at TV network NBC ruled he was too sick with a fever to host the Tonight Show.

Leno was taken to a hospital near the studio where he tapes the show and now reveals a weird stalker almost got past staff by pretending to be a man of the cloth.

Appearing on Ellen DeGeneres' show this week, he explained, "I'm lying in the bed ... and I hear, 'I'm Mr. Leno's priest; I'm here to see him.' Well, I'm not even Catholic."

A quick-thinking nurse realized the mystery man was a fake when she quizzed him about his religion. Leno still finds the story funny, but TV bosses at NBC didn't — and they boosted security outside Leno's room after the incident.

John's strange pick-up lines?

CREEPY John Mayer has used some interesting lines to try to impress women.

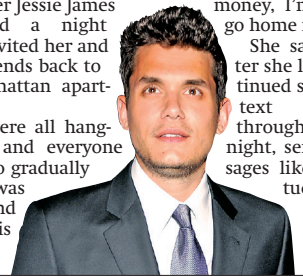

Pop singer Jessie James recounted a night Mayer invited her and some friends back to his Manhattan apartment.

"We were all hanging out and everyone started to gradually leave. It was just he and I at this point,"

James said in an interview with WEAN radio. "I told him, 'I need some taxi money, I'm going to go home now.'"

She said that after she left, he continued sending her text messages throughout the night, sending messages like, "Let me tuck you in."

Gotti family faces foreclosure on mansion

REMEMBER THEM? Now that a New York State Appellate Court ruling lead to foreclosure on Victoria Gotti's Long Island mansion — the five-bedroom, 5½-bath white brick residence familiar to viewers of her 2004 Growing Up Gotti reality show — the daughter of late mob boss John Gotti declares, "This is by no means over," people.com reports.

Speaking outside Brooklyn

Federal Court on Wednesday, after a hearing over her $650,000 US debt to housing lender JPMorgan Chase, Gotti, 46, said, "I'm never going to lose the house — trust me," reports the New York Post and Daily News. "The only way I'm leaving is selling it, and we wanted out of there, anyway."

The house currently is on the market for $3.2 million.

When word of Gotti's housing problem became public earlier this week, the so-called Mafia Princess told Newsday, "I'm bitter. The house, all the marital assets, are part of a divorce package (from ex-husband, Carmine Agnello) I have never seen yet."

There's something about Ryan

AWKWARD Sandra Bullock and Scarlett Johansson share a secret — they've both seen Ryan Reynolds naked recently, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

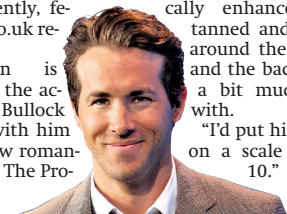

Johansson is married to the actor, while Bullock bared all with him in their new romantic comedy The Proposal.

Bullock jokes she was far from impressed with her hunky co-star's body.

She joked, "Ryan's surgically enhanced, overly tanned and a bit soft around the middle — and the back hair was a bit much to deal with."

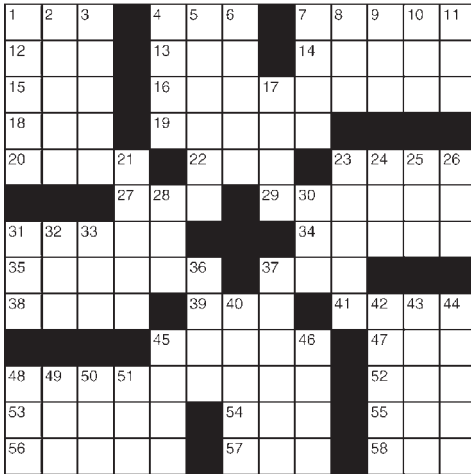

"I'd put him at a four on a scale of one to 10."

HOW TO PLAY: Digits 1 through 9 will appear once in each zone — one zone is an outlined 3x3 grid within the larger puzzle grid. There are nine zones in the puzzle. Do not enter a digit into a box if it already appears elsewhere in the same zone, row across or column down the entire puzzle.

Metro Recipe of the Day

Scallops with Herb Dressing

INGREDIENTS:
1 lb (450 g) fresh scallops
12 oz (335 g) dried tagliatelle
3 tbsp (45 ml) olive oil

DRESSING:
Bunch of parsley
Bunch of mint
Bunch of chives
1 lemon
2 tbsp (25 ml) wine vinegar
5 tbsp (75 ml) olive oil
1 tbsp (15 ml) capers
6 large pitted black olives
Salt and black pepper

METHOD:
1. Put large pot of water on to boil. For dressing, rinse and dry herbs. Chop parsley and mint, snip chives and put in measuring cup; you need 3/4 cup (175 ml).
2. Grate lemon rind and add to measuring cup with vinegar and olive oil. Roughly chop capers and olives and add, then season to taste with salt and black pepper, mix and set aside.

3. Check each scallop has had muscle removed, then rinse and dry.
4. Add pasta to boiling water and cook according to package instructions.
5. Meanwhile, heat olive oil in large frying pan over high heat and fry scallops 4-6 minutes until lightly browned and just cooked through.
6. Remove from heat and pour on dressing. Drain pasta well and serve topped with dressed scallops.

ARIES

MARCH 21-APRIL 20
If you don't like the fact that someone with less experience is trying to tell you what to do, then let them know. You don't have to be rude about it.

LIBRA

SEPT 23-OCT 23
Certain people seem to be going out of their way to undermine your confidence, but they won't succeed. By mid-next week you'll be more self-assured.

TAURUS

APRIL 21-MAY 21
You may be tempted to act first and ask questions later but the planets warn that might not be wise. If you have doubts, take plenty of time before deciding.

SCORPIO

OCT 24-NOV 22
Is someone trying to cheat you? It's possible, but it's just as likely they're as confused as you are. Either way, don't assume you will get a fair deal today.

GEMINI

MAY 22-JUNE 21
Honesty may be the best policy but it's liable to make matters worse today, so lie if you must; console yourself that on this occasion, it's for a good cause.

SAGITTARIUS

NOV 23-DEC 21
You took on a lot of new responsibilities recently and you may be wondering if it was such a good idea. But you made your choice and you must live with it.

CANCER

JUNE 22-JULY 22
If you give too much away today you could find later on that someone has stolen your big idea for their own profit and glorification.

CAPRICORN

DEC 22-JAN 20
Don't stray too far from the straight and narrow today. If you stick to the rules you'll do OK, if not quite as spectacularly as you had hoped.

LEO

JULY 23-AUG 23
You may be desperate to prove you're not just a one-trick pony, but don't take on too much too soon. The world thinks you're doing fine as you are.

AQUARIUS

JAN 21-FEB 18
Maybe not everything has gone your way of late but life moves in cycles and it won't be long before you are on the upside of the curve again.

VIRGO

AUG 24-SEPT 22
Stay focused on your number one priority. Others may try to distract you today but the only thing that matters is reaching that goal you have set yourself.

PISCES

FEB 19-MARCH 20
Someone may deserve to feel the edge of your tongue but think carefully before you lash out. Build them up, don't knock them down.
